Faculty of Education
Department of Educational and Counselling Psychology, and Special Education

Tenure-Track Instructor in Inclusive Education for Teacher Education

The Department of Educational and Counselling Psychology and Special Education (ECPS), located in the Faculty of Education at the University of British Columbia, invites applications for a tenure-track Instructor in Inclusive Education for Teacher Education. The appointment will be effective July 1, 2020, or as negotiated with the successful candidate.

Teachers are now expected to design inclusive classroom environments, removing barriers to meaningful, collaborative learning for all students, including those with diverse learning challenges. This change is a substantial shift, specifically away from a special education model of largely pull-out student supports to an inclusive education model in which general education teachers are collaboratively supported by special education teachers to design common learning environments that benefit all students. To proactively respond to the need in the field, the Instructor in Inclusive Education for Teacher Education will innovatively design and deliver programming for pre-service teachers on special education within an inclusive education framework, including pedagogies such as universal design for learning (UDL), self-regulated learning (SRL), and social and emotional learning (SEL).

Applicants for this position must have an earned doctoral degree in Special Education or a closely related area by the appointment start date, experience teaching in K-12 settings, evidence of successful university-level teaching in teacher education courses, and enthusiasm about collaborating across the breadth of expertise in the Special Education area, the Department, and the Faculty of Education. Preference will be given to applicants with expertise in online course design and delivery for teacher education; expertise in UDL, SRL, and SEL pedagogies; potential to make educational leadership contributions through innovative course and program design and delivery; and evidence of leadership activities that tie to educational communities and/or policy makers. Preference will also be given to applicants with contributions to the scholarship of teaching and learning centered on the preparation of pre-service teachers to implement inclusive education models for special education services, and Indigenous perspectives on inclusive education.

The successful candidate is expected to develop and teach in-person and online undergraduate courses on inclusive education as part of the Teacher Education and Special Education diploma programs. The total workload will be equivalent of 24 credits per year. This workload includes a teaching assignment of courses scheduled over the academic year (typically four to six 3-credit courses) in combination with significant educational leadership responsibilities, such as curriculum development, evaluation, innovation, course coordination, graduate teaching assistant supervision, and other leadership roles.

As the largest academic unit in the Faculty of Education, ECPS has 44 tenure stream faculty members and five program areas, including Counselling Psychology; Human Development, Learning and Culture; Measurement, Evaluation and Research Methodology; School and Applied Child Psychology; and Special Education. More than 400 graduate students are enrolled in the Department. The Department has strong ties to schools, colleges and universities, and community and governmental agencies.
